A Catholic Boy's Ticket to Confessional

God stood watching over Michaelangelo's shoulder as he chipped away at the stone

But Michaelangelo became a man possessed—
He went fucking berzerk.

(I know I shouldn't say that with God in the room but it's true.)

He wasn't supposed to make it That good, but he couldn't keep His hands off you
And I can see why.

You are a beautiful
slab of rock, baby,
and when the volcano erupted you began to flow and ooze with your hot scent all over the earth.

And you're so hot you scorched the hands of that sculptor 'til he cried Mercy, baby, Mercy
And his eyes sizzled as they looked upon you
And his fingers twitched from the steam off your skin.

He danced with you close around the room ignoring The modesty of his Lord, Wrapped his polishing cloth around your waist and put on the finishing touches.

And all He did was give you life.

--Mark A. Clements