Select Poems

Lisa Bullard

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/thenorthmeridianreview

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons

Recommended Citation
DOI: https://doi.org/10.7825/2769-5115.1009 Retrieved from: https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/thenorthmeridianreview/vol1/iss1/10

This Prose is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in The North Meridian Review by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact digitalscholarship@butler.edu.
Lisa Bullard has written ever since she could. She was raised in Montana where she was once bucked off a horse and didn’t get back on. She now lives in the Pacific Northwest with her husband and two children. Before having children, she travelled around the globe on a shoestring, and since children she has found a new appreciation of packing snacks and a change of clothes for all excursions. Besides writing, she enjoys snowboarding, hiking, canoeing, and binge-watching shows while folding tiny items of clothing. She has taught writing courses at colleges and universities in Washington, Montana, and New York.

Time

I used to think of time as flowing forward relentlessly marching forward never to be snatched back or bargained back even with good deeds or repentance but in my own mind time travels backwards again and again to times I crave forgetting to people who hurt me even to times I feel deep in my DNA but cannot place on my tongue at night especially I fall backwards tumbling through time in the wrong direction back through history that is my own and is not behind closed eyes and closed doors bending the laws of time that were laid out that say time moves in one predetermined direction: forward You’ve Got to Have a Plan for when your burned-out flame finds you because he thinks the stars you wished on together the dreams you whispered to one another meant that you were meant for each other forever

he thought the poems he wrote would be the only poems you would get from a lover

you loved him you’ve got to know what to do if he shows up and thinks you owe him you once nurtured him the same way you nurtured a new kitten who lost his mother you’ve got to know how far you would go you’ve got to got to got to have a plan

have a plan
have a plan
A Flashback

time clutches me with a sudden grip one second I wait for sleep and the very next: NO!! but I can’t stop the assault on my mind as he looms over me again and I am powerless again raped again terrified paralyzed I leave my body again and return again seconds pass trapped in the memory but the anger stays raging and the shame

I want so bad to shake and I lay awake feeling betrayed by time and my mind

You, Papa

Standing by the bank of the Birch Creek I stoop down and dip my hand into its icy current and the water moves past me I can’t hold onto it I think of you, Papa, I struggle to grasp you but again you slip away and I knew you more in my mind than not, you always left away to Texas, away to Nevada, away to Alaska you look different from every angle and when you arrive you slip through my fingers again and the slap of my expectations sting and I try to please you, to be your girl and oh how you are proud of me but you forget birthday after birthday you miss most of my plays you aren’t there to screen my dates but you took me fishing and we laughed together and you baited my hook and gutted my fish and fried it on the fire for our dinner and I cling to that memory rolling it in my hand like a smooth stone but then you leave again and again you’re always leaving then you drink too much again you come late to my wedding and you leave early and we don’t dance a father/daughter dance but you give me a plaque you made when you were a little boy a homely looking plaque featuring a hand-painted hunting dog and I hang it, cherished, on my wall I. Papa: “The Awaited Guests Arrive”

doop-doop-dee-doo

A little tune for you, dearest dear dear dear dear daughter . . . oh, okay, so I’m a little just a little drunk . . . hee-hee-hee but just hang on, sit tight and CHECK THIS OUT!
Wooo-eeeee! Jeff gave me this harmonica tonight! See! We drank a little whiskey to celebrate YOU coming for a VISIT!
Oh you know I miss you kids!
doop-doop-dee-doo. Ha ha ha.
And here’s a little tune to you my son-in-law, son-in-law
doop-doop-dee-doo
Can you tell I just played harmonica For the first time in my life TONIGHT!
Wooo-eeeee! Am I glad you’re here.
I LOVE you two! You know that don’t you? Woweee! I love you!
doop-doop-dee-doo. Ha ha ha.
II. Daughter: “Cotton Candy Land: It’s Where We’ve Always Lived” the words are stones in my belly stuck in my throat sand in a pipe and damned if I’m going to let them out now

I feel like I’m three years old again and I don’t want to be!
I This brings back too many memories. I can’t laugh because it’s not funny to me.
I I love you, Papa, but I can’t be around you when you’re drunk. I’m leaving.

we don’t do that in our family we carefully look away we forget what we saw when we remember, we pretend that we don’t it’s all cotton candy for us everything is okay for us sweet soft and fun for us if we can just stuff enough cotton candy in a volcano maybe it will turn into a candy land if we can just get it right and damned if we won’t try and damned if we won’t go crazy trying

I tell myself to lighten up it’s just a fun time dammit I can laugh myself back to cotton candy land “Ha Ha Ha! That’s so funny, Papa! Ha Ha Ha! Wow!

What a frickin’ musical genius! Ha Ha Ha!”