ACCIDENTAL TAUTONYMS

JEFF GRANT
Hastings, New Zealand

Whether you call them repeaters, double-ups, reduplications, or technically, tautonyms, words like FROUFROU, HINAHINA and GUITQUIT are fascinating. From ATLATL to ZOOZOO, and KAVAKAVA to TUCUTUCU, from DIVIDIVI to QUINAQUINA, and RIRORIRO to CHIQUICHIQUI, they all catch your eye.

My favorite tautonyms are the 'accidental' repeaters, words such as TESTES, PALPAL, VALVAL, SESES and the lovely HOTSHOTS that are 'visual' but not 'aural' doubles. Actually, in some compound examples the two halves are pronounced almost identically. For instance, with a word like LIPSLIPS there is very little difference whether it is LIP + SLIPS or LIPS + LIPS.

Here is a small collection of these intriguing 'accidental' tautonyms. Four-letter examples like ANAN, ISIS, MEME and itIT (a musical breast implant for women who are sick of men staring at their breasts and not listening to them) have not been included, nor have words like BERBER, MURMUR and TARTAR. Those with no source shown are personal coinages. I'm sure readers can add to this list.
