Trout

Emily Viggiano Saland

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth

Recommended Citation
Saland, Emily Viggiano (2012) "Trout," Booth: Vol. 4 : Iss. 6 , Article 5.
Trout

Abstract
The fish is a vessel: cartilage, some bone.

Keywords
fish, thoughts, consciousness, water
Trout

Emily Viggiano Saland

The fish is a vessel: cartilage, some bone. The water that goes into the fish passes through him virtually unchanged, almost as if he wasn’t there. When he dreams, which is not often, he dreams of forward movement, the lateral line. On some level, he is aware that once a great fish swallowed a man whole. This may sustain him. In order to show that a fish experiences pain, it is necessary to show that a fish has consciousness. Without consciousness, there is no pain. Hatched with his eyes open, and without eyelids, there are certainly things the fish would have chosen not to see, had he been given the choice. Complex behavioral displays that seem to reflect distress can be purely unconscious. The fish understands that to ask for life is to receive life, and so he goes about with his mouth agape, a kind of prayer.

Emily Viggiano Saland holds a BA in Classics and English from Cornell University and an MFA from George Mason University, where she was the Heritage Writing Fellow and editor of Phoebe: A Journal of Literature and Art. Her poems have appeared in DIAGRAM, Mare Nostrum, Smartish Pace, The Cincinnati Review, and Pear Noir! She currently works at Marist College, in Poughkeepsie, NY.