

2017

Author Biographical Notes

JiASS Staff

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/jiass>

Recommended Citation

Staff, JiASS (2017) "Author Biographical Notes," Journal of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences:
Vol. 20 : Iss. 1 , Article 13.

Retrieved from: <https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/jiass/vol20/iss1/13>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of the Indiana Academy of the Social Sciences by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact digitalscholarship@butler.edu.

AUTHOR BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES (IN ORDER OF APPEARANCE)

M. Todd Bradley, PhD, is an associate professor of political science at Indiana University Kokomo. His research areas include civil society actors, such as nonprofits and nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), and the roles they play in democratization efforts in “developing” countries. Additionally, his research focus considers the role of NGOs in societies, such as that of Japan, that have traditionally marginalized (or overlooked) civil society actors in “mature” democracies.

Emmett Dulaney is a professor of marketing in the Falls School of Business at Anderson University. His areas of interest include consumer behavior, public relations, and social media.

Rebecca Gunn is an assistant professor of marketing in the College of Business at Oral Roberts University. She received her DBA in marketing from Anderson University (Indiana). Her research interests include marketing communications, consumer behavior, eWOM, and social media.

Nuan Gao is Assistant Professor of East Asian History, Department of History, Hanover College, Indiana. Her research interests focus on the cultural and social transformations of late-nineteenth-century and early-twentieth-century China.

Sara Hare is an associate professor of sociology at Indiana University Southeast. She received her PhD in sociology from Indiana University Bloomington in 2002. Dr. Hare teaches courses in gender roles, social movements, statistics, and research methods, and she researches topics in the area of gender and media.

Gregory T. Kordsmeier is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Indiana University Southeast. His research focuses on social interaction in culture industries. He utilizes qualitative methods in that research, focusing on in-depth interviewing, participant observation, and qualitative content analysis of documents. In particular, he is interested in understanding the social-psychological and micro-sociological forces that affect work processes in arts organizations, and the effects this has on artists and the art that they make.

Payton Schnarre graduated with a bachelor’s degree in psychology from the University of Southern Indiana in 2015. She is currently pursuing a master’s degree in social work at the University of Southern Indiana.

Aimee Adam is an assistant professor in the psychology department at the University of Southern Indiana. Her research focuses on the impact of the media on romantic relationships, the formation of parasocial relationships, and teaching-related issues.

Anne Statham received her PhD in sociology from Indiana University in 1976 and has taught at the University of Southern Indiana since 2007. Before that, she was on the faculty at University of Wisconsin–Parkside for many years; there, she led a multiyear study of the Chrysler plant shutdown that occurred in late 1988. She was inducted into the Kenosha Labor and Education Hall of Fame in 1996 in honor of her work on this project. She has published a number of books and articles on a range of issues, including gender and work, women and poverty, identity in interaction, and environment and society.

Paul Greider received his PhD in sociology from Loyola University Chicago in 2006 and taught at St. Cloud State University and Florida Southwestern State College before retiring in 2015. His interests include the sociology of work, along with the impact of race, class, and education on members of the working class. In his past life, he spent more than 30 years on a shop floor as a factory worker and union steward. He is currently working on a manuscript about his tenure in the factory.

Jason VanAlstine is an associate professor of economics in the School of Business at Indiana University Kokomo, where he teaches undergraduate courses in economics and statistics. He is a member of the Faculty Colloquium on Excellence in Teaching and has won multiple teaching awards. Jason's research, which has resulted in six publications, focuses on the economics of diversity and the scholarship of teaching and learning.

Steven R. Cox is a professor of finance in the School of Business at Indiana University Kokomo. He teaches graduate and undergraduate courses in finance, accounting, and economics. He also teaches in the Freshman Learning Community and the Honors Program. He is an award-winning teacher whose publication outlets include the Journal of Money, Credit, and Banking, the Journal of Banking and Finance, and the Journal of Corporate Finance.

Dianne M. Roden is a professor of finance in the School of Business at Indiana University Kokomo. She has taught both undergraduate and graduate courses in finance and accounting, and she has received eight awards for teaching excellence. Dianne's major focus of research centers on issues of corporate ownership and control and has resulted in more than 20 refereed articles published in high-quality journals.

Lisa Boothby is Executive Director of Pharmacy and Outpatient Services at Dukes Memorial Hospital/Lutheran Health Network in Peru, Indiana. She holds an MBA from Indiana University Kokomo and a PharmD from the University of Florida.

Jeffery M. Vergo, PsyD, graduated from the University of Indianapolis with a degree in clinical psychology. He currently works at the Captain James A. Lovell Federal Healthcare Center in North Chicago, where he treats our veterans in their residential PTSD program. His research interests include minority mental health, providing psychological care to traditionally underserved populations, and graduate training in psychology.

Dr. Mixalis Poulakis, PsyD, is an assistant professor at the University of Indianapolis School of Psychological Sciences. He immigrated to the United States from Greece in 1992. Dr. Poulakis graduated from the University of Indianapolis with a degree in clinical psychology. His research interests lie in the areas of multiculturalism, addictions, South Asian psychology, and LGBT issues.

Tj Leshner, MA, graduated from the University of Indianapolis with a degree in clinical psychology. She is currently a doctoral candidate for the clinical psychology program at the University of Indianapolis. Her research interests include addictions, law enforcement, and offender populations.

Samreen Khondker, MSc, graduated from Middlesex University London with a degree in applied psychology. She is currently a doctoral candidate for the clinical psychology program at the University of Indianapolis. Her research interests include multicultural psychology, neuropsychology, and psychometric testing.

Pansorn Benyasut, BA, is a doctoral student in clinical psychology at the University of Indianapolis. She is currently working on her dissertation on the barriers of help seeking in Thai international students in the United States. Her research interests include multicultural issues in counseling, coping and resilience, and psychotherapeutic processes and outcomes.

Sebastián Del Corral Winder, BA, is a doctoral candidate for the clinical psychology program at the University of Indianapolis. He immigrated to the United States from Chile in 2013. His research interests include multiculturalism in mental health, therapeutic alliance, and trauma in children.