8-17-2012

Manners

Victoria Bosch Murray

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Booth by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact digitalscholarship@butler.edu.
Manners

Abstract
They found him dead in a field two blocks from home. Suicide, of course. He must have considered (and then rejected) the options: a gun, its firm steel comforting and masculine but ultimately too messy. Someone would have to clean up after him. Slitting his wrists in the bathtub? A luminal

Keywords
poem, poetry, polite, death

This article is available in Booth: https://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth/vol4/iss8/3
They found him dead in a field two blocks from home. Suicide, of course. He must have considered (and then rejected) the options: a gun, its firm steel comforting and masculine but ultimately too messy. Someone would have to clean up after him. Slitting his wrists in the bathtub? A luminal nightmare. Or perhaps it was the question of which direction to cut – lateral or median? He never was good with directions. Did he consider pills unreliable or womanly, like a sticky host stuck on the back of the tongue? There’s not enough water in the world to wash away that indignity.

Which brings us to drowning at sea, a Sargasso of uncertainty, the estate gyrating for seven long years, a kindness of longitudinal thinking, for sure. A rope? Too painful. This is about ending pain. Gas? The odor of home-cooking, the scent of grandmother with a wooden match – stand back – whoosh! But he’s not a poet. Suicide by cop? He never thought of that, but it could have worked, a heart-pumping rookie with a 44. Or railroad tracks. Tall buildings, bridges, a head-on collision. He had choices. Which is why he walked away as if going to work or play. Nothing odd about this.

He would return, we can almost believe, the house holding hints of him like dust or dishes or sweat, the way it does when we lock the door.
in the morning knowing we’ll be back again at night. Yes, he walked two blocks to an empty field scabbed and fallow, dirt like hope deferred, flint and hard ditches. He used a kitchen knife, part of a matched set, the only thing left out of place. He chose dirt, clumped dark into mud as it married his blood. No hesitation, just one unmemorable slice from left to right, clean enough to let his heart escape his throat.