Seasick

by Asnia Asim

From the corners of yesterday the dirt of you gathered itself clean rolling over ceramic blues clutching abandoned panties in a swirl in the lungs of this apartment your song levitated like a prophet imitations of Klimt trembled at the art of your resolve seasick in your motion the knife couldn't tell finger from fruit skin opened in sharp delight the forgotten fox of love howled for relief from the unbearably tight presence of your absence

Asnia Asim is in the process of orchestrating a 180-degree career flip from financial analyst to graduate student of poetics and creative writing at University of Chicago.
