

Night Guard at a Mausoleum

Stanley Levine

The ping of God re-echoes on an unpaved road;

The crude tin roof accepts its rival waves;

The spirit of death awakens its challenged song.

In the quaint hut amidst its unborn graves

I harken to the call of life

And lift a rodent from its mother's nest.