JUST THE RIGHT POEM

J. JAMES MANCUSO
Niskayuna, New York

There once was a young girl named Mary
Who wrote to her beau's brother Terry,
"There's nothing more that I'd like
Than a right Wrighte rite
Of marriage with your brother, Terry."

So, Terry responded the following night,
"Be sure to write 'right Wright rite' right."

How sadly she grieved her misspelling,
Her marital fancies disspelling,
She hastened in terror
To fix up the error,
And promised to brush up on spelling.

Her sister did comment the following night--
"I see you made Wright write 'write right rite' right, right?"

Then Mark Wright inquired of the sister,
Of whom it's said "One can't resist her,
As to where on the note
His brother Ter wrote
Of the error, and then Mark Wright kissed her.

So the sister responded with minimal fuss,
And their conversation proceeded then thus:

"On which side of the note did Wright write 'write right Wright rite' right, right-- right?
"Right, Wright, right."

--J. James Mancuso
Schenectady, NY
written 28 August 1981
all rights, rites, and Wrights reserved.

Note of explanation:
The final lines, written in other words, would read...

"On which side of the note did Terry Wright scrawl "write 'correct rite of marriage with a Wright' correctly" correctly-- on the right side?"
"Yes, Mark Wright, on the right side."