After reading Dmitri Borgmann’s discourse on “Welsh: Reversed English” in the February 1985 Word Ways and noting his invitation (or challenge) to replicate his studies in other languages, I decided to determine what a similar examination of the Turkish lexicon would reveal. For my survey, I used A Turkish-English Dictionary (Oxford, 1957), Second Edition by H.C. Hony with the advice of Fahir I/. It is not the most comprehensive Turkish dictionary available (I have several more comprehensive ones in my bookcase) but it is a very good dictionary by any standards, it is easy to handle and its typeface is easy on the eyes.

Turkish, I found, is not as cooperative, if I may use that word, as Borgmann found Welsh to be. That is to say, I was unable to turn up any seven-letter or even any six-letter Turkish words that read as English words when reversed. However, I did find 14 five-letter words and 52 four-letter words. These totals do not include a number of Turkish words that, when reversed, yield given names or place names. Also, I did not look for, or record, expansions of basic Turkish words. Turkish is an agglutinative language and the variety of suffixes that can be added to almost any word is quite large. For example, I could have included, but did not, the Turkish word elin (of the hand) which, when reversed, gives Nile (the basic word el means “hand”). I also did not look for, or include, various verb forms or plurals (except irregular ones), even though Borgmann included such words in his Welsh list.

Purists may well take exception to some of the Turkish words that I did include. Since 1928, Turkish has been written in a Latin alphabet that includes some letters not found in that used for English. I have treated as equals Turkish’s two g’s (g and ğ), two i’s (ı and ı), two o’s (ö and ő), and two u’s (u and ü). Whether or not this is acceptable I leave to Word Ways readers to decide.

- acaba (I wonder? Is it so?)
- kitab (book)
- nisab (level of income)
- serab (mirage)
- tarac (pillage, plunder)
- telif (reconciling, compromise)
- sinif (class, category)
- sala (call to prayer)
- selâ (bicycle saddle)
- koma (apostrophe; act of putting)

- selâm (salutation, salute)
- selim (free from defect, safe)
- sedin (thine, your)
- sedir (platform, sofa; cedar)
- demir (iron; anchor)
- setir (a covering, veil)
- revir (small military hospital)
- pota (crucible)
- reva (lawful, permissible)
- haya (testicle; shame, modesty)

While I was listing, I kept a pleasurable count of them were of six letters, I did not consider such as eve as a word.

Jos Yolları (Words of Turkish palindrome)

- damad (son-in-law)
- elele (part of rope)
- kabak (pumpkin)
- kaçağ (fugitive)
- kalak (noster)
- kaçağ (back)
- kavak (poplar)
- kayak (ski)
- kastak (Cossack)
- kelek (raft)
- kesek (clod; path)
- kilık (shape)
- kipik (half-calf)
- kirik (broken, crooked)
- kapak (cover)
- amma (but)
- emme (act of...
While I was scanning Hony's dictionary to compile the above listing, I kept my eyes open for examples of Turkish palindromes. I was pleasantly surprised to find a good many, although most of them were fairly short ones. Only one, kulluk (slavery), was of six letters, but 29 were of five letters and 4 of four. Again, I did not consider, or include, expansions of basic Turkish words such as eve (to the house). Unless the Turks publish their own Soz Yollari (Word Ways), the following is possibly the first list of Turkish palindromes ever compiled.

- Seda (echo, sound)
- Ed'ab (dimensions)
- Saf (that hits the mark, right)
- DARB (blow; multiplication)
- Garb (west; Europe)
- Turk (peat for fuel)
- Iراد (income, revenue)
- Ekid (strong, firm)
- Tard (expulsion, repulsion)
- Amud (pole, column)
- Nale (moan, groan)
- Ense (nape)
- Elif (Arabic letter alif)
- Deri (skin, hide)
- Ipek (silk)
- Enik (whelp, cub, puppy)
- Ekal (lesser, least)
- Amal (actions; desires, hopes)
- Krail (king)
- Aval (half-witted)
- Ecil (cause, reason)

- Damad (son-in-law)
- Elele (part of to shake hands)
- Kabak (pumpkin, marrow)
- Kacak (fugitive, contraband)
- Kalak (nostril of an animal)
- Kacak (back-scratcher)
- Kavak (poplar)
- Kayak (ski)
- Kazak (Cossack)
- Kelek (raft)
- Kesek (clod; turf)
- Kilik (shape, appearance)
- Kipik (half-closed eye, winking)
- Kirik (broken, cracked)
- Kapak (cover, lid)
- Amma (but)

- Ekil (food)
- Niam (benefits)
- Enam (book of prayers)
- Etim (more or most perfect)
- Ekim (sowing; October)
- Elim (painful, grievous)
- Enin (moan, groan)
- Ekip (team, crew, gang)
- Ayar (degree; fineness of gold)
- Ecir (reward; hireling)
- Amir (commanding)
- Emir (order, command; chief)
- Esir (prisoner, slave)
- Abes (useless and lowdown)
- Dog (flank; breast; withers)
- Enis (sociable)
- Erat (private soldiers)
- Alet (tool, instrument)
- Taht (throne)
- Girt (imitates cutting sound)
- Dort (four)
- Rast (straight, right)

While I was scanning Hony's dictionary to compile the above listing, I kept my eyes open for examples of Turkish palindromes. I was pleasantly surprised to find a good many, although most of them were fairly short ones. Only one, kulluk (slavery), was of six letters, but 29 were of five letters and 4 of four. Again, I did not consider, or include, expansions of basic Turkish words such as eve (to the house). Unless the Turks publish their own Soz Yollari (Word Ways), the following is possibly the first list of Turkish palindromes ever compiled.

- Damad (son-in-law)
- Elele (part of to shake hands)
- Kabak (pumpkin, marrow)
- Kacak (fugitive, contraband)
- Kalak (nostril of an animal)
- Kacak (back-scratcher)
- Kavak (poplar)
- Kayak (ski)
- Kazak (Cossack)
- Kelek (raft)
- Kesek (clod; turf)
- Kilik (shape, appearance)
- Kipik (half-closed eye, winking)
- Kirik (broken, cracked)
- Kapak (cover, lid)
- Amma (but)