

A LODE FOR LOGASTELLI

ERIC ALBERT
Medford, Massachusetts

From Mrs. Byrne's Dictionary: logastellus, n. "a person whose enthusiasm for words outstrips his knowledge of them" (John McClellan in Word Ways, August 1970)

Many readers of these pages are familiar with Mrs. Byrne's Dictionary, a delightful collection of "unusual, obscure, and preposterous words." The above definition shows that Mrs. Byrne recognized a felicitous Word Ways contribution when she came across it. I would like to now return the favor by giving here a portion of my personal list of evocative, illuminating, and just downright bizarre words.

The list has been culled from a collection of primary and secondary reference works. In tagging the definition sources, I have used the following scheme:

no tag	Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition
BYRN	Mrs. Byrne's Dictionary, by Josefa Heifetz Byrne
CENT	The Century Dictionary and Encyclopedia
CHAM	Chambers Twentieth Century Dictionary
GAY	Gay Talk, by Bruce Rodgers
GRAN	The Grandiloquent Dictionary, by Russel Locke
LECH	Lecher's Lexicon, by J. E. Schmidt
NI3	Webster's Third New International Dictionary
OED	The Oxford English Dictionary
POP	Poplollies and Bellibones, by Susan Kelz Sperling
SLAN	The Slang Thesaurus, by Jonathon Green
WORD	Words, by Paul Dickson

When an essentially identical definition appears in two or more of the above works, I have picked the tag according to my idiosyncratic order of dictionary preference, which is Webster's Second, Oxford, Century, Webster's Third, Chambers, and everything else. Thus, a definition with the tag OED might also appear in the Century Dictionary or Mrs. Byrne's Dictionary, but it is unlikely to appear in Webster's Second Unabridged. The tags are solely for the convenience of the reader; they do not specify how I originally learned the words.

I hereby gratefully acknowledge the compilers of the above-listed works, the contributors to Word Ways, the members of the National Puzzlers' League, Alan Frank, Susan Assman, L, Mary Hazard, and everyone I've temporarily forgotten who over the years has suggested a word for this list. Additions to the list are solicited; please send your contributions to the editor.

SIMILES DICTIONARY

This is the name of a book priced at $68 by Gale Research Company, containing some 16,000 similes arranged within 500 thematic categories (such as hands, hand movements, fingers, and handshake; laughter, gaiety, grins, smiles, and humor; love, friendship, and love defined). An extensive bibliography and author index is included at the end.

This book will give would-be writers a lot of ideas for lively phraseology. It is also great for browsing, as the following examples suggest. Female breasts resemble a bald man's head, a peeled orange, water-filled balloons, party balloons, soft purses, armaments, bread loaves hot from the oven, clusters of the vine, dried apples, giant cabbages, overripe squash, billowing pennants in a strong wind, small hard apples, ivory-colored hills, plump gourds, overripe fruit, crescent moons, barrels, long white grapes, prunes, calabashes, creamy milk-fed veal, five-pound flour sacks, and marshmallows

More specifically, nipples resemble

Tootsie rolls, poker chips, cookies, peony buds, dark eyes, milk-chocolate discs, buttons, and overgrown M & Ms.

If you wish to describe something as extremely difficult to do, it is like playing the piano with boxing gloves, finding a good hamburger in Albania, getting a merry-go-round concession on the White House lawn, putting a bandage on an eel, selling a ham to a kosher caterer, sighting a rifle in the dark with rain falling, nailing Jell-O to the wall, taking a sip of water from a fire hose, getting a pearl out of a lockjawed oyster, squeezing a third cup from a tea bag, draining a swimming pool with a soda straw, dragging a cat by its tail over a rug, recovering a contact lens from a subway platform at rush hour, dealing with a porcupine in heat, and taking a hair out of milk
