

NEW PALINDROMES

If Malayalam is typed backwards, malayalaM, it is visually different from Malayalam. When the word is spoken, the first letter 'a' is short but the final 'a' is long, which means that it also sounds different backwards. Because visual and phonetic discrepancies are rife amongst the words we unhesitatingly accept as palindromes, is there any reason why we should not accept dowód (Polish: proof), rúgur (Icelandic: rye), or uçuru (Turkish: flying; volatile) as palindromes? Unlike these three words, the palindromes below have no stress or sound accents, and all but the 2nd and 4th are new to Word Ways.
