

7-2010

From the Editor: Top Five Reasons to Be the Alki Editor

Julie Miller

Butler University, jlmlle5@butler.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/librarian_papers

 Part of the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation

Miller, Julie. "From the Editor," Alki: The Washington Library Association Journal, Vol. 26 No. 2 (July 2010), p. 4.

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the University Libraries at Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Scholarship and Professional Work by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact omacisaa@butler.edu.

Top Five Reasons to Be the Alki Editor

by Julie Miller

Julie Miller

5. The Alki editor is by definition a member of the core constituency—“writers and editors of scholarly books and journals”—of the Chicago Manual of Style, adept at the placement of commas before the conjunctions of compound sentences and after items in a series (see Section 6.18 through 6.56 of the 15th edition). Not sure whether a pronoun agrees with its antecedent? Section 5.35 has the answer. Unclear about the capitalization of a position title? Section 8.21 covers it.

I find it comforting to know that, as long as I have that bright orange book on my shelf, I don't have to remember all the rules of usage—I can just look them up. (I acknowledge that only an English-major geek would rank this reason in the top five. Guilty as charged.)

4. The Alki editor has carte blanche to attend various gatherings of the Washington library community, from formal to funky. To develop an interesting issue of Alki, the editor has to find a pool of contributors as varied and interesting as the WLA membership—what a great opportunity to meet people who share a passion for libraries! As Alki editor, I have attended WLA Board retreats (and many meetings), WALE and WLA annual conferences, various library programs and events (Big Read, Get Lit!), and Friends' meetings, in person and online. At each one, I have gathered ideas for Alki issue themes and articles, and I handed out many business cards. It's very gratifying to approach a presenter after a great conference session and to say, “I edit Alki, the journal of the Washington Library Association. Are you interested in submitting an article?”

3. Okay, it's just cool to say, “I edit Alki, the journal of the Washington Library Association.”

2. As Alki editor, a lot of people have your back. First, the Alki Editorial Committee is phenomenal. They come from public, academic, and special libraries, representing urban and rural communities. Some are new to library work and bring a fresh perspective to the issues of the day; others bring long experience and a well developed network of contacts in the Washington library community. They help the editor to identify the issues and trends of interest to the WLA membership. The WLA Board is equally committed to making the journal as strong as it can be. They recognize that Alki is a “value-added” benefit of membership, and they are tireless (albeit sometimes tardy) contributors to the journal.

My first issue as Alki editor was also the first issue produced in collaboration with MCA staff, and they have been tremendously supportive. Tammy Reniche, director of design and publications at MCA, is a layout and design savant; she makes it possible for the editor to focus on the content, rather than the mechanics of putting together an issue. (In short, she makes the editor look good.)

“ Let me now sing the praises of the columnists, those regular contributors who, issue after issue, delight the readers (and therefore the editor) with prose of wit and style. ”

Let me now sing the praises of the columnists, those regular contributors who, issue after issue, delight the readers (and therefore the editor) with prose of wit and style. While I am saddened to report that Angelina Benedetti is taking a break from “Solinus,” you'll find David Wright in his usual spot, and Kate Laughlin serves up an appetizing preview of the PNLA/WLA joint conference in “The Learning Curve.”

1. The Alki editor has the rare privilege of giving voice to the association—the ultimate channel of communication for WLA. When I began my term as Alki editor two years ago, I knew very few members of the Washington library community outside of academic libraries. Through Alki, I am now connected. At its best, the journal embodies a conversation among the WLA membership, and it has been a joy to join into the conversation.

Bo Kinney will be leading the conversation with the next issue of Alki. Bo works in Special Collections at Seattle Public Library, and he recently served as chair of the Reference Interest Group of WLA. As a member of the Alki Editorial Committee, Bo has been a regular contributor. He's a fine writer and will be a fine editor as well. 📖

Julie Miller is interim dean of libraries at Eastern Washington University.