8-3-2012

The Death of Gravity

Jason Nemec

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth/vol4/iss8/1

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Booth by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact omacisa@butler.edu.
The Death of Gravity

Abstract
A poem.

Keywords
poem, poetry, pull, weight
August 3, 2012

The Death of Gravity

After Merwin

Jason Nemec

The way we see at each moment the air is some god inside us guiding our eyes, clutching the back of our skull, pivoting it like a camera –
a long slow pan into focus.

Or is it blindness
and does the earth have a voice, a low register, a vibration beneath our bare feet?

Feel our heels reeling, gravity gone, a memory
of when the planet held us.
Imagine it: the bodies lifting off, zooming up,
the sky inhaling,
vacuuming us like dust; we will be plucked from what we thought was the one certain thing.

Jason Nemec is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Cincinnati. His stories and poems have appeared or are forthcoming in Kenyon Review Online, Washington Square, Rattle, Meridian, Nimrod, storySouth, Verse Daily, Switchback, Tinge, Vestal Review, and various other magazines. He is at work on a novel.