1-23-2015

Mandolin in White Wood, Curing the Wood

J. Camp Brown

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth/vol7/iss1/4

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Butler University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Booth by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Butler University. For more information, please contact omacisaa@butler.edu.
Mandolin in White Wood, Curing the Wood

Abstract

Put up the bar-drenched mandolin,

she says. It reeks of booze, a struck chord
coughs smoke, and I'm tired of comments from strangers

Cover Page Footnote

Mandolin in White Wood, Curing the Wood was originally published at Booth.

This article is available in Booth: http://digitalcommons.butler.edu/booth/vol7/iss1/4
January 23, 2015

Mandolin in White Wood, Curing the Wood

by J. Camp Brown

Put up the bar-drenched mandolin,
she says. It reeks of booze, a struck chord
coughs smoke, and I’m tired of comments from strangers

about your desirous finger dexterity.
So, useless, hung on the wall, it dries, and while I wait, I wander into a classroom with fluorescent dimming lights enter in medias res, saying: And lo!

I swallert a lit cigarette and took not ill, combusted neither. Praise him! All God’s people say (Amen).

Are you saved your place? Then take out Foucault and prurient, write, real hard, perineum as the tenor of a simile involving the smoothness of the petals of a flower. One writes, then raises her hand: My perennial smells dizzying like tobacco leaves curing in the barn. You, I say, discourse naughty, darlin’, but your usage eros is striking. Say, how barely legal is you, anyway? Anyway, cut back on sprawl.

Trim the bushes and your subject really does look bigger. After class, I’m the little phallic shape thrust into the yonic sky that knows:—there is no cure.

A native Arkansan, J. Camp Brown now plays bluegrass mandolin and teaches English in Poughkeepsie, NY. He received his MFA from the University of Arkansas and has been the recipient of fellowships from the Arkansas Arts Council and from Phillips Exeter Academy. His poems have appeared in such journals as Black Warrior Review, Memorious, Spillway, Shenandoah, Juked, Post Road, and Crazyhorse.