

ALPHABETIC CLUSTERS

JEFF GRANT

Hastings, New Zealand

The challenge is to find 26 words, each using a separate letter of the alphabet as many times as possible.

Any English-language dictionary can be consulted, including slang, dialect and technical ones, but not gimmicky works like Mrs. Byrne's Dictionary of Unusual, Obscure and Preposterous Words, which records a slightly-misspelt 1913-letter enzyme containing (among other things) 321 Ys and 471 Ls! Just in case other agglutinated monstrosities exist in more standard scientific dictionaries, an upper limit of 55 letters has been set for entries in this collection.

Capitalised words (in particular, place-names) are barred, as are letter-repetitions like the 42-Z representation of snoring found in an OED citation.

Hyphenated terms are allowed, excluding chemical compounds containing numbers or Greek letters, such as the following synonym for the anthracycline antibiotic daunomycin, found in Chapman and Hall's Dictionary of National Products (1994). Note the six Xs!

8-acetyl-10-3-amino-2,3,6-trideoxy- α -L-xylohexopyranosyloxy-7,8,9,10-tetrahydro-6,8,11-trihydroxy-1-methoxy-5,12-naphthacenedione

In the case of very long chemical or medical examples, if shorter words containing fewer of the key letter exist, these have also been shown.

It could well be possible to improve some entries on this list. Let the editor know if you find any better ones.
