THE ADEINRST ALPHOME

DARRYL FRANCIS
Sutton, Surrey, England

In the May 1999 Word Ways, Rex Gooch introduced the term alphome to readers. This is used to refer to the letters of a word arranged in alphabetical order. For example, AEGINRST is the alphome of the words ASTRINGE, GRANITES, and so on. Elsewhere in the same issue, Ross Eckler noticed the relative paucity of AEGINRST transposals in published sources: DETRAINS, STRADINE, STRAINED, TARNSIDE. According to the statistics presented in his article, AEGINRST should be marginally more fecund than AEGINRST in producing transposals.

AEGINRST has been studied intensively by logologists over many decades, and over 150 transposals have been identified. Although it seemed unlikely that AEGINRST could ever yield anything like 150 transposals, I decided to see how far the gap between AEGINRST and AEGINRST could be narrowed. In the list which follows, I present 50 transposals of AEGINRST. I suspect that continued searching will uncover many others, although the total will still be far short of the AEGINRST one.

The abbreviation cfp denotes a citation form plural (as in "there are three TRAINEDs on this page").

In May 1999 Ross Eckler also noted that the alphome AEINORST ought to produce many more transposals than its six known ones. I hope to present a fuller list of AEINORST transposals, going well beyond six, in a later Word Ways article.
